

President Obama has declared this month National Teen Dating Violence Awareness and Prevention Month (link). In honor, Day One has compiled some of the most pivotal moments of the last 25 years in the fight to end dating violence. This February, we encourage you to share our infographic called “Ending Dating Violence: Two Decades of Progress in the United States.”

Here is another resource promoting a safe and loving future for our children. Indeed much has been done to protect our young people—but as you can see on the graphic, created by Day One, only 14 states mandate dating violence education in schools. More needs to be done. Please use this infographic as you write about this important issue. You can download a hi-resolution version here. If you wish to use this graphic, please give credit and link back to Day One at www.dayoney.org.

Day One partners with New York City youth to recognize, prevent, and end dating abuse. Through preventive education, free and confidential supportive services, legal assistance and community programs, Day One helps young people make healthy choices from day one of dating.

